Early Days 'Down on the Farm'

ALMOST EVERY TOWN had its creamery in the "old days." This one was at Charleston, Wasatch County, operated by George Daybell and Sons. It burned down about 1912. The teams of horses, wagons, milk cans, tall pipe chimney — all these add to the atmosphere of the scene many old-timers still remember. (Photo submitted by Eva Brickey of Provo.)

FIRST CARLOAD of Aberdeen Angus cattle to come to Utah, about 1914, shown in photo at left. Cattle were shipped from Iowa into Nephi by the late George E. Howard. Some of early Utah Angus breeders such as the Howard Brothers and Argyle Brothers of Nephi and the Nielson Brothers of Leamington and Lynndyl can trace the origin of their herds back to the cattle George Howard shipped to Nephi. In photo, Mr. Esher and Mr. Rhone, in gray suits at each

THRESHING TIME a half century ago in American Fork is shown in this picture taken in 1924. The steam-operated threshing machine was owned and operated by William King of American Fork and his son William E. King. The father is shown sitting on the machine. The two men had three threshers and would go to different farms to work. In the picture they are at Hans Christensen's farm in American Fork. The photo was submitted by Mrs. William E. King, 535 E. Main, American Fork.
